

Day of MOURNING

Speaker profile – Renee Ozee

Making private grief public to promote safety

Renee Ozee is making public her private grief as a mother whose 23-year-old son died nine years ago in an industrial incident. She's sharing that personal experience at this year's Day of Mourning ceremony to honour B.C. workers who lost their lives in 2017.

"I want to speak for my son, Scott. I want people to understand how important it is to keep job sites safe, to keep working men and women alive," Renee says.

Her son was electrocuted while working on the roof of a house when the gutter pipe he was carrying touched a high-voltage line.

"Describing what happened takes so few words, but there's no way to really explain what Scott's death has meant to me, to his 17-year-old brother Liam, to Scott's life partner Krista, and to his friends on and off the job."

Renee got the news at a police station and, with Krista, had to tell Liam. "That was the hardest thing because he and Scott were so close. At the funeral, Liam said Scott was like a dad to him, and I know that Liam was Scott's life."

"There's not a day now that Liam doesn't talk about his brother. He tries everything that Scott did and liked. It's as if Liam is trying to be Scott."

"I think about Scott all the time, too. I visit him at the cemetery as often as I can, on special holidays, and his birthday."

Day of MOURNING

She hears people express their sympathy by saying that they know what she's going through, "but most of them have no idea, not a clue. It's as hard for me today as it was that first afternoon."

A single mother, Renee wants greater attention paid to workplace safety, declaring that "everyone needs to do more to stop young workers losing their lives."

"Employers need to meet their responsibility to prevent injuries. Workers should be fully trained and their tools and equipment must always be checked to make sure they are in good working condition. We all need to help get the message out that losing your life can be much too easy."

That's Renee's message for the Day of Mourning, "in spite of my being uncomfortable with public speaking, and certainly with talking about life without Scott.

"This needs to be said, so no other family goes through what mine has."

For more information please contact:

Trish Knight Chernecki

Senior Manager, Media Relations

trish.chernecki@worksafebc.com

Tel: 604.232.5814 Cell: 778.871.5841